

Chinese support enhances education in Kenya's Mathare slums

Despite her small frame, Genevive Akinyi has the confidence to excel in class, which has earned her the admiration of teachers at her school in the heart of the Mathare slums of Nairobi, the Kenyan capital. Akinyi, 13 and now a seventh grader, is an affable and witty pupil at the Hanka Education Center, which has benefitted from donations of desks, lockers, and chalkboards from Transsion Holdings, a Chinese tech company known for its smartphone brands, including Tecno, Itel, and Infinix. Xinhua.

United States and China are Both Vying for Africa's Minerals

The United States finds itself in a new geopolitical contest with China—not over ideology, but for access to critical minerals. These resources are essential to modern technology and the transition to a low-carbon future. With 30% of the world's critical mineral reserves, Africa is at the heart of this struggle. Yet, while China has aggressively expanded its influence through diplomacy and investment, the U.S. has lagged behind. As global demand for minerals like cobalt, lithium, and graphite intensifies, the U.S. must reassess its foreign policy toward Africa. America cannot afford to fall further behind in this strategic competition. Int Policy Digest LLC.

Envoy alerts Tanzanian traders on pending China Import Expo

CHINESE Ambassador to Tanzania Chen Mingjian has urged the Tanzanian business community to register for the upcoming China International Import Expo (CIIE), highlighting the potential for their products accessing the expansive market in the Far East. Ambassador Chen made the appeal in Dar es Salaam recently during the seventh CIIE briefing session, which involved Chinese attaches and representatives from the Tanzanian business community. She emphasized that participation in the expo, scheduled for November 5-10 in Shanghai, would strengthen trade ties between the two countries and provide Tanzanian companies with a unique platform to attract international buyers and investors. IPPMEDIA.

Chinese cuisine growing in popularity in Tanzania

Chinese cuisine is becoming increasingly popular in Tanzania. Along with traditional classics, restaurants are also offering dishes that incorporate local ingredients. Daniel Kijo went to meet some of the people helping to bring Chinese flavors to dinner tables and restaurants throughout East Africa. CGTN.

Uganda boosts food security through South-South cooperation with China, FAO

As the world marks World Food Day on Wednesday, experts in Uganda highlight the country's growing benefits from South-South cooperation with China and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The experts said the partnership is helping Uganda leverage China's agricultural expertise to enhance food production and strengthen food security. Under the third phase of the South-South Cooperation (SSC) project between China and Uganda, supported by the FAO, nine Chinese agricultural experts have been stationed in local communities and research centers across the country. Xinhua.

Algeria and China Discuss Expanding Cooperation in Electronic Industries

The Algerian Minister of Industry and Pharmaceutical Production, Ali Aoun, received on Tuesday in Algiers the Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of the Chinese company ELINC, Li Li Gong, with whom he discussed ways to develop bilateral cooperation in the industrial sector, with a focus on electronic industries, the ministry said in a statement. This meeting was held at the ministry's headquarters, in the presence of a high-level delegation accompanying the CEO of ELINC, a subsidiary of the CEC Group that specializes in electronic industries and electronic protection systems, the same source said. AL24 News.

Angola-China cooperation fosters mutual progress, says ruling party official

The long-standing cooperation between Angola and China has deepened the friendship between the two nations, fostering progress and mutual well-being, according to a senior official from Angola's ruling party. Angela Braganca, secretary for policy and cadre development of the ruling People's Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA), made the remark during a seminar held in Luanda, the capital of Angola, on Monday. In her opening speech at the Sixth Annual Meeting on China's Sustainable Development Goals, Braganca emphasized the significance of cultural and academic exchanges between the two countries. Xinhua.